A TRAINED SCHOLAR.

As a scholar there are few who have dug so deeply into all branches of learning and searched so thoroughly and untiringly for the treasures of knowledge. He is a thorough botanist and for a number of years past he has annually visited the mountains of Virginia in-order to search for rare plants and flowers in which he takes such a delight and with which he is so entirely conversant.

He is also an astronomer and delights to search the heavens, in which he follows the paths of the stars and planets with his glass. His robust nature and excellent health has made it possible for him to endure fattering tourneys and labors to ELMINGTON, VA., March 16.—Special.— In going over several counties in the Tenth Congressional District I find there is much interest and talk about the sev-eral candidates supposed to be in the field. Hon. B. T. Gordon, Commonwealth's Attorney of Nelson county, is widely known and has a host of friends. Mr. Gordon is and has a host of triends. Air. Gordon is an able lawyer and the most popular man in his county, and has always reflected among and credit in any position he has filled. His many friends are pressing him to be a candidate from the Tenth district. Politics otherwise is very quiet. At Night.

(Written for The Times.)
When day is done the roving hawk
Wings fast his homeward flight, And eagles seek their nest-crowned with signs of coming night;

The sailor on the dreary waste,
Dreads not the gloomy sea
Till darkness falls, then oft he longs
For lands far o'er the lee; And I, dear heart, when night comes on, Would fain sit down with thee.

The lone days seem not half so long While sunshine lights the earth, And oft when with the merry throng I join their sportive mrth; But when the stars come, one by one, And phantom shadows glide, I stand and gaze across the space— The miles that us divide— I stand and gaze, and wish that I Could have thee by my side.

I breath three words, home, love, thy name. They fall upon the air

With reverential eagerness,
Akin to fervent prayer.
The night winds kiss my lonely cheek In purest sympathy,
Then dreams possess me—waking dreams-

Sweet dreams of love and thee; To where I'd gladly flee,
To home, and love, and happiness,
And hours of joy with thee.

She saw that the check was on some national bank, but did not notice which one. She told him that she had not so much money in the house and returned the paper. The man' stated that he was employed at Allen & Ginter's. He failed to return to the boarding-house on Saturday, and upon inquiry it was found that he was not employed at Allen & Ginter's, nor has he been seen since.

Both ladles seem quite put out by the occurrence and especially the one who lives on Franklin Street. When she inquired at Allen & Ginter's factory for Miller, the assistant time-keeper, she was informed that no such person was in their employ.
